

WIFE IS HELPLESS
TO ASSIST MAGNESS

SUN TABLE.
Sun rises.....	6:20
Sun sets.....	5:07
TIDE TABLE.
High tide today.....	8:35 a.m., 8:43 p.m.
Low tide today.....	2:47 a.m., 2:47 p.m.
High tide tomorrow.....	9:15 a.m., 9:26 p.m.
Low tide tomorrow.....	3:30 a.m., 3:24 p.m.

Representative H. Wayne Parker of New Jersey, who was among the President's callers today, said that despite the factional fights on local issues in New Jersey Judge Taft would poll a big majority, as big as given McKinley or Roosevelt.

Mr. Parker did not appear to be so confident about his own return to Congress. Samuel Gompers will be in Newark next Saturday night, and he promises to tear Parker wide open.

President Gompers then quotes several paragraphs from the President's special message to Congress of January 3, 1917, and says that document and subsequent statements show it "utter confusion of the entire matter of injunctions in President Roosevelt's mind."

"In the one message," says Mr. Gompers, "he states fundamental principle, then makes an absurd deduction, and in his attack on me goes back on it all."

Brandenburg, through his attorneys, took that stand in court today. The agreement, the charge against the writer here of being a fugitive from justice was continued today pending such a guarantee from Jerome.

Armed with a bench warrant, but without extradition papers, Detective Fitzsimmons, of New York, is here to take Brandenburg back whenever he is brought into New York for identification.

FALLS SIXTEEN STORIES.
NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—John S. Taylor, forty-four, an accountant, of Brooklyn, was instantly killed today, when he fell down an elevator shaft from the sixteenth story of a building on Wall so far as they relate to any real affection for her. "If anything, it was merely a young love affair and no one ever marries his boyish love. Talk of her bringing suit for breach of promise is needless; she has nothing upon which to bring such a suit, there was never any real affection between them."

"I have made but one complete statement regarding the entire affair, the printed in The Times Sunday. I do not mind the truth being printed, but the numerous reports circulated else-

"When he returned he was told that he shouldn't have left his ship without so many hours after returning from a furlough, just what the rule is I don't know, and for that reason a discharge could not be given him. That is the true reason he could not buy his release."

Brandenburg, through his attorneys, took that stand in court today. The agreement, the charge against the writer here of being a fugitive from justice was continued today pending such a guarantee from Jerome.

Armed with a bench warrant, but without extradition papers, Detective Fitzsimmons, of New York, is here to take Brandenburg back whenever he is brought into New York for identification.

FALLS SIXTEEN STORIES.
NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—John S. Taylor, forty-four, an accountant, of Brooklyn, was instantly killed today, when he fell down an elevator shaft from the sixteenth story of a building on Wall

FALLS SIXTEEN STORIES.
NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—John S. Taylor, forty-four, an accountant, of Brooklyn, was instantly killed today, when he fell down an elevator shaft from the sixteenth story of a building on Wall

Just what the line of defense will be in his case has not been developed, but the present mental condition of Captain Hains makes it certain that his defense will generally parallel that offered by Harry Thaw.

"When he returned he was told that he shouldn't have left his ship without so many hours after returning from a furlough, just what the rule is I don't know, and for that reason a discharge could not be given him. That is the true reason he could not buy his release."

Grandmother's son once blossomed on the hillside. When she visited at the house of her son, Henry Gray, 1540 Twelfth street northeast, and wandered across the yard to a new dwelling next door where her husband-to-be was at work. When Mr. Manley saw her, he said, "I was glad to see you, but I was glad to see you." When Henry Gray while he still held nails in his mouth and his hammer in his left hand.

Grandma Gray, as she is known, came repeatedly to visit at her son's house. Manley kept on driving nails and she kept on visiting. "I was glad to see you," she said, "I was glad to see you." The daughter-chaperone wasn't about.

Although twenty-three years the senior of her middle-aged love, Mrs. Gray is bright and active; says she can keep as good a house as any of the young girls in the neighborhood.

"What's your love?" she asks. "Methusalem loved his wives when he was alive."

Grandma Gray notified only her pastor, the Rev. W. H. Gray, of her husband's daughter-in-law, who was the unwilling and unwitting matchmake. But tonight she will be the guest of honor at a dinner to assemble at the Douglas Memorial Church to welcome to the land of the living the late Mrs. W. H. Gray, a young lover of fifty-six.

Mrs. Gray has a home at Sixteenth street and Twelfth street northeast, where she has lived for many years. She is the happy bride and groom will go after the ceremony to prove to their Juniors that they know how to love just as well as the youngsters.

Twenty years ago, Mrs. Gray has been trying to keep the wedding a secret so that she has six middle-aged children, three of whom are married. Grandma Gray wanted to have her daughter-in-law romance all alone. And so far she has shown ability along that line.

At present, she is the guest of her present, but one of them, Joseph, who is exactly the age of his new father-in-law, is going to be married. She is the mother of a new dad just as soon as he can, which will be several days too late for the wedding.

and filch from the tollers, because they are tollers, their rights as citizens and freemen."

Mr. Gompers then refers to President Roosevelt and the critics of the Pearce injunction bill and quotes the entire trade-dispute act passed by the British parliament within the past two years, and argues that the former was not as broad as the competition in the definition of the rights of workmen as the British law.

It is a fact that Mr. Roosevelt denounces a proposition as wicked," continued Mr. Gompers, "does not so much as to say it is wrong, and the law and party obligation have persuaded him to modify his judgment and his broad tolerance is not to be denied. It is to him to find his unwarranted attack on me so thoroughly appreciated that he has not only forgiven me but re-terizes him for his past utterance in as severe language as that with which he has charged me with apostasy to his cause."

(Continued on Sixth page.)

His brother, T. Jenkins Hains, also indicted for murder in the first degree as accessory and principal in the killings of Annis, likewise entered a plea of not guilty, but made no defense of insanity. The pleas were entered through the aid of a local attorney, J. C. Hains, Hains brothers, who reserved the right to withdraw the pleas.

Justice Garretson disallowed the demurrer filed by Mr. McIntyre to the indictment against T. Jenkins Hains. The case will come up again in Flushing on Monday, when the date of the trial will be fixed.

Both the Hains brothers were clean-shaven when they reached court today. When he was last arraigned, T. Jenkins Hains wore a beard and mustache, while Captain Hains had shaved off the beard he raised during his imprisonment.

The Mrs. Claudia Hains confessed intimacy with Annis was indicated by a letter which John F. McIntyre, counsel for the defense, gave out today. Omitting certain details, which he said no newspaper would print, the letter read:

"Dear Billy: I'll come down Monday evening. Everything is over now between Pete and myself. He has found out everything and I am glad. I will be glad to send you my address. Want to see you and tell you all about it. Am almost crazy. Good-by."

"CLAUDIA."

Captain Hains was the first to be arraigned. He gazed uncertainly at the judge, who told him to get up and be accepted. Even then, he remained standing until pulled into his seat by a guard.

Just what the line of defense will be in his case has not been developed, but it is expected that the mental condition of Captain Hains makes it certain that his defense will generally parallel that offered by there, just the week before he was arrested in New Orleans, was blown up and arrested as soon as we returned to Louisville."

A more technical indignation on the part of her husband, Mr. Magnaes, regards as the cause of the predicament in which he finds himself today, the attitude of the federal government toward the Sunday school convention in Louisville the latter part of June. He recalled that the government had attempted to prevent the convention from coming to Washington to obtain his release. He deposited the money with the Navy Department and thought that everything would be all right; to return next day.

Technical Guilt.

"When he returned he was told that he shouldn't have left his ship without so much as a court-martial. He was infuriated, just what the rule is I don't know, and for that reason a discharge could not be given him. That is the true reason he could not buy his release."